also focus on how architecture and landscapes offer clues to how people lived, how places developed, and how events unfolded.

Bryan Van Sweden's work with the Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission is in the area of historic preservation, providing technical assistance to groups that are seeking to preserve historic buildings and neighborhoods in their communities and coordinating the bureau's efforts with regional and local heritage organizations.

As always, this program is free and open to the public and refreshments will be served. Please join us and bring a friend.

Garden Village Memories

As another school year draws to an end and the children look forward to another fun-filled summer, I am reminded of the wonderful array of summertime activities that were available to kids in West Pittston when I was growing up the 1960's.

One of the best attractions was the playground program held at the high school football stadium. My favorite activity there was the football locker room that was turned into an arts and crafts center each summer. Long tables were set up and you could work all day on as many crafts as you had the patience to make. Some that I recall were, braiding gimp into lanyards and bracelets, weaving baskets out of freshly soaked canes, painting plaster molds (my personal favorite) and making pot holders from fabric loops. I think that somewhere in the depths of my attic many of my summertime creations still lurk. The playground also held a hat show and pet show each summer. One year my winning hat was made from a colander turned upside down on my head with kitchen tools tied to it. The pet show was always exciting since my tiny dog never met another dog that he didn't want to fight. My brother always had to help me keep Snappy under control on the pet show day.

Many kids today are fortunate enough to have their own back yard pools but those were rare during my childhood. We all gathered at the town pool everyday to cool off. As grade school children, we enjoyed watching the older high school kids trying to look grown up. It was like watching one of those beach blanket bingo movies. The snack bar featured many wonderful treats of the time with my favorites being frozen Milky Way bars and Bonomo taffy. Usually you would smash the wrapped taffy on the sidewalk to break it up into bite size pieces but in the hot summer sun, that wasn't necessary and we just pulled it apart.

It seemed that every few weeks in the summer one of the organizations in town would hold their annual picnic. I remember picnics being sponsored by the Little League, the Moose, the fire departments and some of the churches. These picnics were loads of fun for kids with inexpensive games and good food and, since all your friends would be there too, the social part was exciting as well.

Many of you probably recall some of these events and have fond recollections of your own summertime fun.

HITCHNER BISCUIT COMPANY

WPHS was happy to hear that the borough is working to save the Hitchner Biscuit Company building on Exeter Ave. Boyd Hitchner of Haddonfield, New Jersey, whose grandfather and uncles ran the company, was in town recently and he stopped by to check out the old building. We all hope that the borough's efforts to save the building will be successful.
